After that the two models took turns coming out in all kinds of gorgeous dresses and suits and fur coats and evening gowns, and each one had a special hat to go with it. There was a lovely black dress with a white fur muff that the lady announcer said could be worn in the morning or the afternoon, and a grey suit and a black broadtail jacket. Then there was a nutria coat, but the announcer said we should pay attention to the hat, so I did. It was lavender and had some feathers in front that came down on the red-haired model's forehead. She was wearing lavender gloves, too, and suddenly she took off the coat and turned it inside out and it was lavender, too. Heles Rossi said that reversible things were all the kussts in Tel Aviv out in a black suit with gold threads running through it and when she took off the jacket there was a sleeveless dress underneath. The red-haired model showed another reversible fur coat with a blue lining and ister Mrs. Neumann showed a

You can go to lierael when you are older," said the doctor. Through their tears, both girls struggled bravely to smile with a dignity that was majestic. Perhaps larsel would be the richer for seeking character as well as brawn, or even character without brawn, in the selective immigration.

The next family was hysterical. The one after that, a rough-and-ready-looking lot, was accepted and trooped out exultant, the mother carrying under her bulging mauve gown a future Sabra, assuming, that is, that they do not change their minds about align. Who can tell what this Sabra will be farmer or fishwife, worker or loud shopkeaper or artist or Prime Minister in the new-old Jewish State?

STAR-GAZING "

THE winter sky in all its spiendour appears at 9 p.m. at the beginning of December and at 7 p.m. at its end. The most beautiful constellation, Orien, is well above the horizon and can be seen in hill country as well. To the Babyloniana, Orion was a hunter, going after Taurus, the Bull. The reddish star marking his left shoulder (as the observer sees it) is the giant Beteigues, and his right foot is Rigel. The three stars in the centre, all of second magnitude, mark the hunter's belt.

Planess: At the beginning of the month Jupiter, in Cancer, rising at $1.5, is already the brightest star in the sky, and to-wards the end it reaches maggi-tude -2.2. Its four large moons are easily distinguishable through fair nights.

The morning sky, on the other hand, is dominated by Venus, which is fast moving apparently away from the sun and rising earlier each morning. At 5.45 am. on November 26 it was so brilliant that I was blinded by it, and it was elearly visible long after it was day. It reaches its greatest brilliancy on December 11, and on the 18th, when it meets Saturn (magnitude 0.5) it itself is 80 (eighty!) times as bright, at magnitude 4.8.

mly eight, with the puny body of five-year-old, she did all the ough work in the tavern kept by her master and mistress sho were little better than seasts. She ran upstairs and lownstairs, scrubbing washing, fiting heavy things and carrying vater from the spring in a bucket as big as she was. Ragged, litty, her body bruised and her lands and legs swollen with chinishins, she was ugly. Happy—he might have been pretty.

Cosette did not believe that he had ever had a mother. The est of the children did. She "for err part, had none." Her whole erson, eyes almost dimmed by ontinuous weeping, me ou the irooping habitual anguish resealed but a single emotion: fear, and yet. hungry, beaten and ormented, in the rare moments when not driven to work, she hisyed Hidden under the table, see place of retreat, and exased and undressed a leaden sword the ise of her finger, her only possession. So strong in children a the hunger for toys!

Once upon a time (and it might sawel have been today) in a country illage in Poland — but it might sawel have been in Paris, London, or an Israel sec'bors—here was a little boy. Like any oy of eight, whether in the heder in a public school, that boy vanted, more than anything elsen the world, a penknife of his won. Children believe in justice. They cannot grasp the complicated laws of the haves and have another the complicated laws of the haves and have nots. Let us agree with Alice in Wonderland. The Queen asserted: "The rule is — jam tomorrow and jam yesterday, but never jam today." It must come to jam today." "It must come to jam today." — Alice objected. "No, it can't" said the Queen. "It's jam every other day, today jan't t'other day, you know." Hanukke deserves to be tother day, the day of giving and joy. ### ISRAEL JAZZ SINGER

Wile recently heard Larry Stare, by affair, a hobby, or even more, all against for the first time in Jerusalem at the President Hotel. Mr. Starr conquered the field with "Conquest" a recent hit on the market, and made it hard to forget his "Remember Me." But what we found most amazing was that some time around midnight, after an international journey through blues, ballads, intricate jazz numbers and Riddish songs, a little Israel romance brought us back home. It was gung in a free, well-secented Hebrew.

"I learned the language in the Army," Larry told us. At 13 (four years ago) he left his native town of Manchestar, said good-bye to his father, who is the cantor at the synagogue of Leeds, and came to Israel us a tourist. He was attracted by what he saw here and decided to stay The one thing I always loved to do since I was a kid was to sing. coid. Most people would be astonished if you tried suggesting otherwise.

It is true that the "coid" and influenza are most prevalent during the coid, wet winter months, just as polio is most prevalent during the hot summer months. Recause of the seriousness of the latter disease and the publicity given it, however, no one would for a moment consider blaming its onset on the heat. A "coid" can appear in the middle of sweltering August, when it would be hard to find a breath of coolness anywhere, day or night. Perhaps the best proof that the disease doesn't necessarily accompany coid is that on isolated Antarctic and Arctic islands "coids" very rarely appear unless a ship has recently put in its appearance, when an epidemic rages for a short while.

epidemic rages for a short while.

Experiments Not Conclusive
Experiments conducted with volunteers also indicate that exposure to cold is a negligible factor in contracting the disease. Volunteers were divided into three roups, two of which were inoculated with the virus, while one was not. Of the two former groups, one was kept under ideal conditions, while the other was subjected to severe changes of temperature, exposure to draught, etc. The group not inoculated was also subjected to this strenuous routine, in the two inoculated groups, the percentage of those who caught cold was almost the same, while there were no symptoms at all in those who had not been inoculated.

Furriers' Skill Works Wonders

that rival the high-priced originals.

Queen Elizabeth II brought the fabulous ermine back into fashion. Original stocks were completely cleaned out before her Corenation, and since the poor animals have not kept pace, furriers produced an inexpensive ermine that can be detected only by a very professional eye. This accounts for the many ermine capes and collar trimmings that Paris has been showing this year, Now the musk-rat turns up, looking like silvershiue mink. So beautiful is it worked that one would be hard put to tell the difference between one of these muskrat stoles and one of real mink.

These secrets of the trade were tween one of the music tween species and one of real mink.

These secrets of the trade were revealed by Mr. F. Besen, of Bosen Furs. Tel Asiv, as he showed us a maskrat cape, that can be worn as a belero from his export collection. He added that israel furriers enjoy an extremely fine reputation abread, and the quality of their dressing and dyeing is likened to that of eld Leipsig. Our Forsian lamb is in greatest demand. Furs finished here bring an added value of 38-35 per cent. Some 20 firms, compleying about 150 percens, are involved in the United Kingdom.

This year, broadtail is one of the favoured skins. Mr. Rosen features it in both grey and black. The sleeves of a full back but straight line coat have cuffs that can be turned up deeply and a collar that can be worn both flat and standing up. A black broadtail with a high wide collar comes with an ermine tie.

Short evening jackets with wide, pushed-up sleeves can also be worn over suits. For the young matron, Mr. Rosen has a

Vegetables in Season
Use vegetables in season; but when they are plentiful on the market you get them for a song. I know one wise housewife who does her Shabbut cleaning on Thursday afternoon and her Shabbut shopping early on Friday morning at the market, and gets her vegetables at a fraction of their price the day before. If you can store vegetables in your refrigerator, buy them sarty in the week I save 3 per cent on my vegetable bill in this way.

Long-on-the-Liver
On the market today is an Eritrean tinned meat known as "goulash" (in a blue label) which sells for about IL-1.800 a tin (about half a kilo in weight). It is rather highly spiced but the meat therein is mostly liver, sweethreads and other expensive and wonderful tidhits. There is no fat or gristle. You can get three good dishes for several persons out of one tin.

1) Use the juice as stock for a good broth bisque or borsht. It is very concentrated, so you can build it up with vegetables to make quite a potful of steaming, stimulating soup, Don't add salt or spices.

3) Take all the meat which is a time time there is no the second to the second control of the second control

Combine cheese, nuts and crumbs. Melt margarine, Add anion and fry until brees. Add water, lemon fuice, sait and pepper. Add dry mixture and stir well. Turn into greased baking dish or wonder pot. Bake until brown.

Economy cooking usually takes more time than it does to fry a steak or grill a flounder, but it is the carafully cooked casserole dish that is the epiteme of good cookery. The English learned how to cook when saust beef was taken from them in World War II, and I daressy that largel women learned much during the hard austerity years. Good ingredients are now pientiful, and though they are costly, a bit of this and that of luxury can perk up dishes of which one has wearted. I find that one tallespoon of sour cream over cottage cheese makes my kids fans of this war-worn dish all over again. Egyplant done in a baking dish with even a hint of ground meat puts it into a new category for the family.

ing me from an artistic philistine into an earnest. Interested, though still ignorant, enthucists. The first was Berenson's 'Talian Painters of the Remainsance, 'of which a magnificently-illustrated new edition was published in 1852 (Phaidon Press, 204-). The second was that provective and Gallically estuberant we Silemer's Glecker and Warburg, 1953, 163, and the third was Gombrich's and the press of the Calleston th by the impeccable Phaiden house at 7/8).

Berenson's book, which was first published as four separate essays between 1894 and 1907, is a classic which effected a revolution in art history and appreciation. It is a lucid and invigorating work which still serves as the best possible introduction to its enormous subject. The Mairaux and the Gombrich are at extremes. Mairaux is a remantic: a high-flyer, a man who is able to bring his fertile but diosyncratic mind to bear on the art of every conceivable time and place. His book is the kind which always infuriates the experts as much as it delights the layman. It attempts a majestic sweep, a total theory of art, and this involves its author, almost inevitably, in many dubious judgments. But "The Voices of Silence" is, of course, far more exhilarating to the average student than the admirable but more pressic monographs of the professional art-historians.

Yet Dr. Gombrich, a Viennese

graphs of the professional arthistorians.

Yet Dr. Gombrich, a Viennese art expert who has lived in England for many years has proved that detailed and precise scholarship need be no impediment to the writing of a lucid and wide-ranging history of art. This is a book which has the unisual quality of serving squally well either as a child's introduction to art or as an illuminating study for instructed adults. The author shows an astonishing breadth of mind and judgment — an ability to sympathize with and propound the virtues of every successive movement in Western art.

This great triad of art books, each of which has been published or republished during the past two years, provides not only the textual revelation of three fine and dissimilar minds, but also a whole gallety of good and varied reproductions. I imagine that they would cure most people of the terror of museums from which I myself suffered for too many years.

Synagogues have been built in Italy for 20 centuries, since Jews first settled in Rome before the destruction of the Temple. These days, new synagogues have been erected in Milan. Turin and Bologna, to replace the old ones destroyed during World War II. Jacob Pinkerteid an architect and author of a valuable book on "Synagogues in Israel," which is now out of print, visited Italy in the summer of 1939 in order to collect material for his essay. We owe to him mans and blueprints of Italian synagogues, since destroyed, which had never been drawn before. He describes architectural development from the Renaissance to our own days, but limits himself to the itechnical aspects of his subject and refrains from historical or artistic descriptions of the synagogue reviewed.

The layman will be mostly interested in the 82 pictures included in the volume, which to many will reveal unknown treasures of Jewish art. A place of honour is given to the Venetian synagogues and to that of Conegliano. Veneto, which was transferred to Jerusalem two years ago.

The book excellently produced by Mosad Bialik enriches our literature on a subject which has been rather neglected. It should also be welcomed as a contribution to the history of Italian Jewry.

BEYOND THE BORDER

B'EINEI OYEV (Through Enemy

Eyes). Three Arab publications on the War in Palestine, translated by Seren S. Sebagh.—Me'srakhot. Tal Aviv. 218 pp., six maps.

There is hatred on every page of this little book: the former Haifa notable hates the Arab League leaders, who failed to provide the protection they promised; the Moslem Brother hates the Egyptian Army leaders, who restrained the Brothers hates the Egyptian Army leaders, who restrained the Brothers private war in Palestine; and the Arab Legion officer sorns the Palestinian Arabs who relied on outside forces to help the mout. All three hate the Jews — and the West.

The day of May 14, 1948. How wonderful the day on which the world held its breath in anticipation of seven armies entering Palestine to free her from the author of the sentence is Rais (captain) al-Russan, of the Arab Legion. The mention of the West is probably an oversight of the part of Glubb Pasha's officer, but it must have come from the heart.

With their mixture of fact and fable, the three publications are of questionable value to the historian. Figures of Jewish casualties and the assertion that the Jews were armed to their teeth are exaggerated, but the idea — borne out from others sources.— that the Arab campaign would be a walk-over is genuine.

Magic of the Desert

BE-TSEL HA-HERMON (In Hermon's Shadow). By Z. Berachot.
Trans. from Yiddish by A. Gondelman—Tversky. Tel Aviv. 130 pp.
Romanticism may be a hangever from another century, but when adventure leads one to the dark tents of the Beduin, there seems to be no style more fitting than the traditional, romantic manner of the East. The camp-fire is down to its embers, the Milky Way is sweeping over the Jordan, the finjon emits its sharp scent of coffee; and now to the dull strumming of a robobo the oft-repeated tale is once more unrolled.

The many Palmah lads who practised this sacred rite, never got beyond a westernized version of Arab custom. Yet in the early years of the Yishau, not a few roving watchmen and travellers succeeded in becoming honoured guests among the small encampments on the fringe of the desert.

small encampments on the fringe of the desert.

The magic of this desert world is caught by Z. Berachot, one of the "tourists" whom the Second Aliya brought to these shores. Whether he be hunting for wild boar or gazelle, or telling of the love of Rachel for Salim, the Poor Arab to whom she had been promised in foolish jest by her father (and thereby hangs a to uch in g tale), his pen always delicately absorbs all that seems native, and still changeless, in the land. Arab vernacular, customs and even snatches of desert love songs add colour to the Hebrew creating an atmosphere the dozens of articles, mostly unsigned, of course, as they represent a rainbow of views about the literary efforts of the impudent colonies across the sea. In general, though, "The Times' writers do seem to admit, if occasionally grudgingly, that there is such a thing as American Writing, and, not quite so generally and a good deal more grudgingly, that it has Independence and Vigour.

It is an odd collection of articles, From an American point of view, a good many of the pieces are interesting only for what they reveal of British stitudes, as there is a considerable effort at soul-searching to explain and justify the off-spring's success in breaking away from the parental ties. The most amusing of these is a ra-

The Times" has done a mammoth job on American writing (significantly, perhaps, it does not call it literature), covering pretty nearly every aspect of it from the comic strips to the little magazines. There are a few first-class critical articles, even from an American point of view, many factually in form ative pieces, some interesting reprints of a number of original Times reviews of American books over a span of several decades, and even a few fairly good examples of American poetry in the flesh. The total labour, however, gives almost no impression of how Americans really write, primarialmost no impression of how Americans really write, primari-ly, of course, because so little textual evidence is offered.

The variety in this anthology is most pleasing. The serious, the comic, the gently satirical meet and blend unobtrusively, and all students of Arabic, especially those in the lower courses of the Hebrew University, will greatly benefit from it.

While it may not fuifil all requirements of educational practice, this manual has several qualities to recommend it. The anthology of Arabic prose and poetry ends with a chapter on Arabic prosedy, specially prepared by the 21-year-old Israel-Arab poet from Tblin, Mr. George Nagib Khalil, and an appendix containing 25 brief but comprehensive biographical notes about the authors from whose works the 60-odd extracts were taken. whose works the 60-0dd extracts were taken.

Dr. Ben Ze'ev, Inspector of Arabic in Jewish schools, and author of several textbooks, has made good use of his long experience. Here we get a glimpse into many of the well-known masterpieces of Arabic literature, ancient and modern. Modern Egyptian writers are adequately represented and include selections from the works of Dr. Taha Hussein, dean of Arabic letters and former Egyptian Minister of Education, who was a friend of Dr. Ben Ze'ev during his period of studies in Egypt and wrote a highly complimentary introduction to his doctorate thesis, "The Jews in Pre-Islamic Arabia and Early Islam." Mr. Forester has few gaps left in the career of his hero. The section of the Hornblower saga under review, cheonologically the third in the series, fills one of them nearly. It is the year 1805, with Hornblower in his first command: supervising the funeral of Nelson; taking a French privateer which had daringly posed as a British boat in an English port; picking up sunken treasure in Turkish waters, against the laws of the sea; and fighting a Spanish frigate on his way home.

Personally, I liked the first chapter best, when Hornblower and his Marie travel all across Personally, I liked the first chapter best, when Hornblower and his Maria travel all across England on a canal tug the young new captain shelving his dignity to help propei the ungainly craft through a long tunnel, lying on his back and pushing with his feet. But the whole is as good as ever, with the mixture as before—derring-do and ingenuity, even cunning, spiced with human traits.

The selections from poetry are equally varied, though, understandably enough, less adequate than the prose selections. There is, for example, the famous "Al-Lamiyya" poem by Samuel Ben Adia (or As-Samaw'al as he is still known among the Arabia, the pre-Islamic poet of Arabia and Jewish chieftain, whose fame is reflected to this day in the Arabic proverb "As-faithful as As-Samaw'al." As its title indicates, the present volume deals exclusively with Israel's fight for independence. The stories, poems and legends have been selected mainly for fifth graders but will no doubt prove attractive to adults as well. While fighting must perforce be given the greatest emphasis, the human angle with its examples of heroism and moral fortitude are aptly highlighted.

Outstanding are the stories "A Sad Tale," "Power of the Hora," "A Lass with a Mortar' him, and we find Nick on the covers the fighting on all fronts and in all odd places and does homage to those who lined up for service—the 65-year-old water-carrier in the istreets of Jerusa.

The declaration of Mr. Kop-hi was made, of course, was the background of the arch for a Turko-Arab pact hich is expected to provide eater security for the Meterranean area against any cursion from the East. Tur-y's interest in such defence rhaps greater or rather immediate than that of others. She is placed graphically in a very ex-ed position, while at the ne time she is undoubtedly strongest and most con-erable of all the Middle stern powers. She is therere a factor of supreme im-ortance not to be neglected any system of alliances h might evolve either in

There is, however, a striking difference between Turey's methods of seeking security and those of the great Vestern powers, which is a ribute to the perspicacious ision of her statesmen. She as not shown herself ready on e g l e c t old friends in the hope of winning Arab riendship. Only a week agone Arab news agencies were utting out reports that Turey was now seeking to regain he prestige lost in the Arab vestern is heard.

It seems that the Israel public has not yet learned that transportation laws are simply normal and logical precautions. Experience and investigation have shown that in addition to the mechanical safety measures used at rail crossings precautions on the part of the driver are necessary. The law was made to explain exactly what these precautions should be.
